Style of dress has managed all through history to demonstrate the mood and pace of its times. As the pace quickens, styles become more comfortable, less intricate, and more suitable to the adaptability of the individual's daily routine.

As Hammond Tech students prepare themselves for future occupations and advance to the part-time on-the-job training, many realize the necessity of appropriate, comfortable dress.

The style changes during the past fifty years have seen some completely new ideas and some returning fashions. 1969 saw the boys wearing the Nehru and mod look, while minis, culottes, and elephant leg pants gained popularity with the girls for after school scenes.

"Fifty years of Tigerism" was the theme celebrated throughout an entire week of Homecoming activities during October 6-12.

As the Tigers prepared themselves for the Whiting Oilers, students participated in such events as Sweatshirt Day, Class Color Day, Sneaker Day, Bermuda Day, Loyalty Day, Tug of War, a tricycle race, pep rally, a parade containing more than twenty floats, a door decorating contest, and the traditional Homecoming Dance.

A huge, gaily decorated cake commemorating Tech's fifty years was presented to Mr. Parson, principal, by the senior class.

The Homecoming tradition at Tech was apparently started in the early 1950's, with the first queen being crowned in 1954.

Being one of few vocational high schools in Indiana and possibly one of the oldest in entire country has always given Hammond Tech a tremendous means of serving the school, community, and country.

During the years of World War II, Tech became a training center and production line. Badly needed trained men and women in many phases of wartime work were speeded through the shops at Tech. The school was in operation nearly twenty-four hours daily.

It was possibly after these war years when the tremendous potential was fully realized and interested parties began an aviation shop in the old building on Russell Street.

Modern well-equipped shops prepare vocational students for a life-time trade and give the academic oriented students the aid of a skill whether they choose to further their educations.

Besides having a decided advantage in a wide choice of academic subjects, Tech students find never-ending opportunities in activities outside the classroom to educate themselves.

In celebration of Tech's Golden Anniversary, P.T.A. hosted Open House the evening of October 23. An interested group of parents, alumni, and friends toured Tech facilities while in full operation.

Players and pom pons encourage spirit

Our '24 Tiger football team, though a better conditioned squad at the beginning of the season than in the past, gained only two victories as opposed to eight defeats.

Tech had every reason to be proud at the end of the '28 season. The team fought like the Tigers they were to second place in the Northwestern Indiana Athletic Conference. 1929 was a rather dismal season with two wins and seven losses.

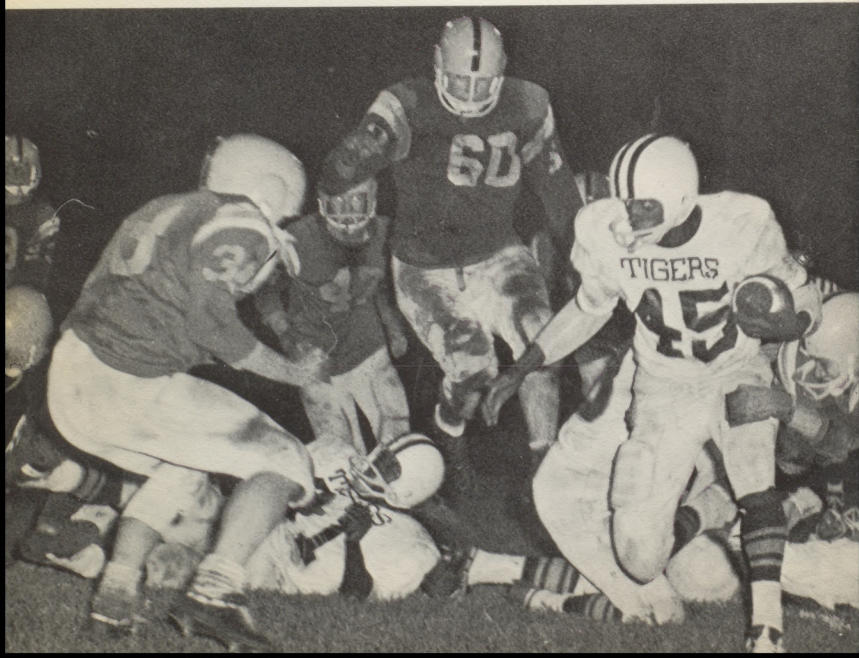

One of the most surprising teams Tech ever had was the '32 squad. Prior to the season's opening the Tigers were not considered very strong. They were small and for the most part inexperienced. But the squad came through as only a Tech team could, winning 7 of 9 games, and for the third straight time won the Little Seven Conference.

Although the size of the '35 footballers compared to that of other schools, we suffered through the season with only one win, and during our first year in the Northern Indiana High School Athletic Conference we saw our most difficult schedule, losing eight games.

This year's team can be proud of their 5-4 record.

Technical training introduced by first staff

Frederick E. Benson
Director 1936-1958

Harry H. Wilson
1958-1964

Mr. Fred S. Barrows came to Hammond in 1919. In October of that year, he established a part-time vocational school in one small room on the top floor of the Central School.

Mr. Barrows believed that training students to be prepared for jobs in industry and business was a major need in education. It was for the benefit of these students that he established Hammond Technical Vocational High School. Barrows stated that Vocational Educational is training for the future, the making of good citizens.

During the first week of school, one student enrolled. This student was Max Demps. He went to school one day each week. The second week of school six girls enrolled. They worked five days a week and went to school one day each week. What a difference when compared to Tech's present enrollment of 1,825 strong!

Hammond Tech would not be what it is today had it not been for the help of Mary Dwyer. In the fall of 1919 she was chosen to assist in organizing the part-time school which was later to become Hammond Technical Vocational High School. From the time of her first class until ill health compelled her to leave the school system she gave all she had to the students at Tech. Her main thought was the success of this school and what was good for the pupils. Knowing she was once an instructor here, Tech students are proud of the memories of her work and character. Her sincere desire was to make a vocational type school a success.

Hammond Tech, a high school designed to help train students for careers in the Calumet area's growing industries. The first class graduated during ceremonies held by H. H. S. because the new school was so young.

Through the many extensive programs made available to Tech Students thousands of graduates have taken classes which helped them meet the needs and opportunities of the current times.

Tech's 1933 Championship Band

1933 was the most successful year for the Hammond Tech Band since its organization in 1927. In the district contest at Valparaiso, April 15, 1933, the band placed in first division with Hammond High. These results made both bands eligible for the state contest. The Tech band competed against seven outstanding bands throughout Indiana. These bands, Hammond Tech and Hammond High, were selected to represent Indiana in the national contest.

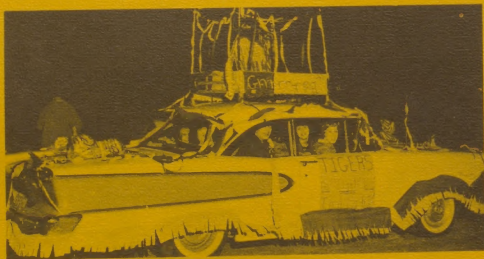

"The Study Girls," a play, was presented June 8, 1925. Birthdays are exciting sometimes, as witness: the birthday party of Dorothy Schuzer, Mary Mondra, and Flossie Green.

Activities provided entertainment for tech students

A big part of Tech's tradition is the Prom. A part of education, it includes the realization that formal situations demand special ways to act, talk, and dress.

Homecoming activities for Tech began in 1953. Over ninety cars entered the Homecoming parade. Tigers Go, Fight, Win, Tonight! was one of the winning entries.

Tradition followed after the parade, when the crowd met in back of Tech for the bonfire. Students always enjoy themselves at the Homecoming Dance following the football game.

1940 State Champions

Tigers display outstanding sports

First football conference in 1938

A Tech team did the impossible despite a severe handicap: 1940 Tech cagers won the State Championship by a margin of 12 points, at a time when Tech was without physical education facilities.

A great story can be made of this team, but one thing must be said: they best exemplified teamwork and good sportsmanship.

These traditions were the guiding rule as early as the first sign of sports at Tech. That was in the Spring of '24 when two senior boys got permission from Mr. Barrows, the director, to start a football team. These traditions remained as every new sport was added, despite the hardships of improving facilities and of traveling distances to practice areas, common right up to 1951 when Tech moved to Sohl Street and got its own physical education plant.

In 1938, Tech entered the Northern Indiana High School Athletic Conference to compete in football and basketball. During this season, Tech had the biggest and heaviest team that ever played here, and had a tough schedule to prove it.

In the 1949-50 wrestling season, coached by Mr. Paul Hoeman, Tech won two State Championships and placed three others in the state meet along with the greatest number of individual and team victories.

Miss Desmore's Office Machines was one class in the early days of Tech. Although the equipment has improved considerably this class is still offered to business students at Tech.

Girls prepare themselves to lead their own lives in a better way after taking courses such as Home Management.

Students receive training in serving a nutritious lunch correctly in Advanced Foods Class.

Tech's first shops for girls were shorthand and typing. That was in 1921 when one typewriter was shared by both the office and the students. Now, hundreds of girls get through preparation for both home and business in Tech's modern, well-equipped shops.

During any year girls in Foods Classes learn many facts about nutrition and kitchen management. They acquire skills in preparing breakfasts, school lunches, dinners and festive parties.

Vocational shops aided boy's in future training

When auto shop first began, it was divided into two separate departments: Auto I for the beginners, and Auto II for the advanced students. Auto I dealt mainly with the chassis of the car, body repairs and how the car is built. The students also learned to make repairs and adjustments which might be needed "on the road."

In Auto II the student continued his work in a fully equipped garage where he would learn the best methods of repairing on a production basis.

In 1922 a new dimension in shops was brought to Tech. Many things such as nuts and bolts, in special sizes and shapes, could be made in Machine Shop. Gears, tool parts, and bolts were made to replace broken and worn out parts on the lathes and other machines. Instead of a certain exercise, every boy in this shop was given something to do which could later be used on machines around the shop.

In early wood shop the first thing that a student learned was how to use his tools properly. He also learned how to run machines such as the lathe, shaper, and grinder. Wood shop also involved blue printing and pattern making. After learning these basics, he might proceed to doing his work as an apprentice carpenter.

Tech was the only Indiana High School approved by the Federal Aviation Agency in aviation training. Tech had two aviation shops which prepared future mechanics in both aviation power plant and aviation airframe.

Auto shop was one of the many shops introduced to help train students for future jobs.

Machine shop was introduced to Tech in 1922.

The main area of study in Wood shop was how to use tools properly.

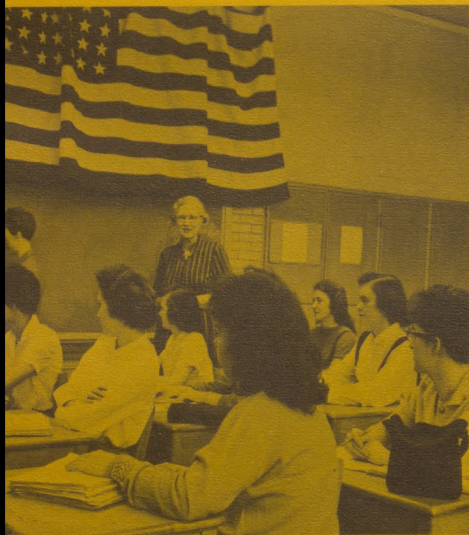

Theories of class instruction were carried on to actual work on aircraft engines.

Classes met demands of the times

Miss Peehl's government class record collections for Korean orphans.

Tech's aim has always been to design class to meet changing needs. Its first classes, arithmetic, hygiene and safety, English and citizenship were organized to serve part-time students who worked in industry and who had not finished regular schooling.

An example of these changing times is in the government. Students receive the best possible knowledge and training to meet the issues of the times. Those at Tech in government and social studies classes gained greater understanding of modern social problems.

A democracy depends upon the ability of its citizens to talk, listen, read and write efficiently and critically. Students are taught to obtain this ability in language arts courses of American Literature and public speaking.

Aside from being useful in government areas, good speech quality helps one in everyday conversation.

Students in speech class were taught how to speak before the public.

Girls in early English class work on compositions.

'49 sees cornerstone

A need for Tech's training was evidenced by the constant search for more space, which would be provided by more classrooms and better shops. Three additions were made in order to house more students and provide them with shops.

Lee L. Caldwell, Superintendent of Schools, gave his guidance and support to Mr. Barrows in working on Tech's development.

The ground breaking ceremony for the new building started on October 2, 1948. Enough of the new building was completed by 1950 to provide the students with overcrowded classrooms in a partly-built school.

The cornerstone laying took place on October 17, 1949. Proceeding this they made the finishing touches on the new school building. A $1.5 million addition, housing an auditorium and girls' classrooms, was to still be added before the final completion of the building.

Activities help bring graduation closer

A guided tour was taken through the nation's Capitol.

As a finale to high school activities, Tech's juniors and seniors joined other classes from the Hammond school system and embarked on the annual Washington trip.

Upon arrival at Washington, Hammond travelers became official tourists. Accommodations and meals were provided and guided bus tours were taken to various monuments, the White House, Arlington Cemetery and the Smithsonian Institute. Every minute of the stay was filled with new sights, yet there was free time for souvenir shopping or to revisit a favorite memorial.

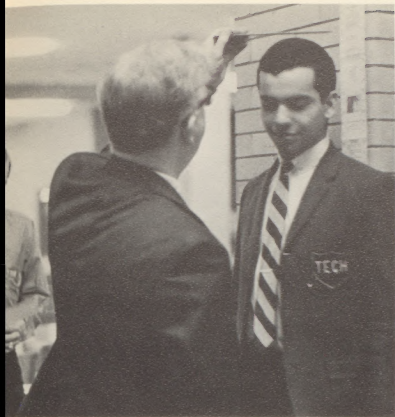

The evening of October 25 was spent on a New York bound train. A tour was taken to such famous spots as Chinatown, the Bowery, the United Nations, the Statue of Liberty and Radio City Music Hall to see the first run hit "Bullit" and a full stage show including the world famous Rockettes.

October 28 brought the happy, but weary travelers back to Hammond, left with the fun and memories of their trip.

As graduation grew nearer the busy hustle of Seniors left a lingering excitement in the air. On January 16, students were measured for their graduation caps and gowns by Collegiate Cap & Gown Company.

On February 21 the cafeteria was romantically decorated with streamers of crepe paper and hearts. During that past week, five lucky girls were nominated for the sweetheart crown. The finalists were Freshman, Peggy Faith; Sophomore, Sheila Duncan; Junior, Brenda Pressley; Senior, Lenora White, and Y-Teen, Gwen Burns. In the midst of the excitement, Lenora White was crowned Tech's Sweetheart by Mr. Parson. A dozen red roses were presented to Lenora by 1968 Sweetheart, Sharon Scott.

Refreshments were supplied by the Y-Teen members and the music was provided by the Soul Street Blues Band.

The week of May 12-16 was devoted to seniors. During this week seniors chose a different day in the week to dress—out of the ordinary. Putting away acceptable school clothing and digging out clothes to fit the pertaining day proved to add fun for all those participating. Among the days were Sweatshirt and Bermuda Day, Clash Day, and Dress Up Day. A new addition this year was Come-As-You-Were Day in which seniors dressed in the type of clothes they would have worn from ages 1-6.

Each year more students are realizing the benefits of different science classes. They enjoy these classes more because there is much class participation.

Students on the Technical Course were required to take chemistry, biology, and physics. For the students on the Vocational Course, general science and physical science were required.

Students in physical science were introduced to the elementary concepts of physics and chemistry. These classes are good training for a student's future because they open up to him newer and more responsibilities.

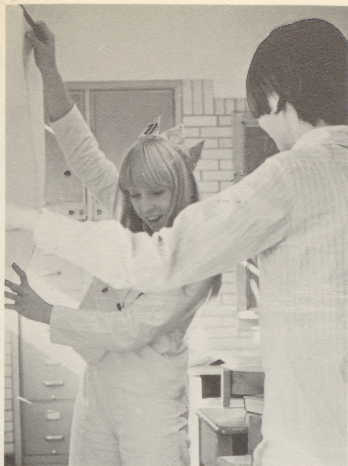

Mr. Welty demonstrates a principle in physics class to Cornelius White.

Mr. Callantine is giving a talk to his government class.

George Payton is showing Mrs. Hodges different countries on the globe in geography class.

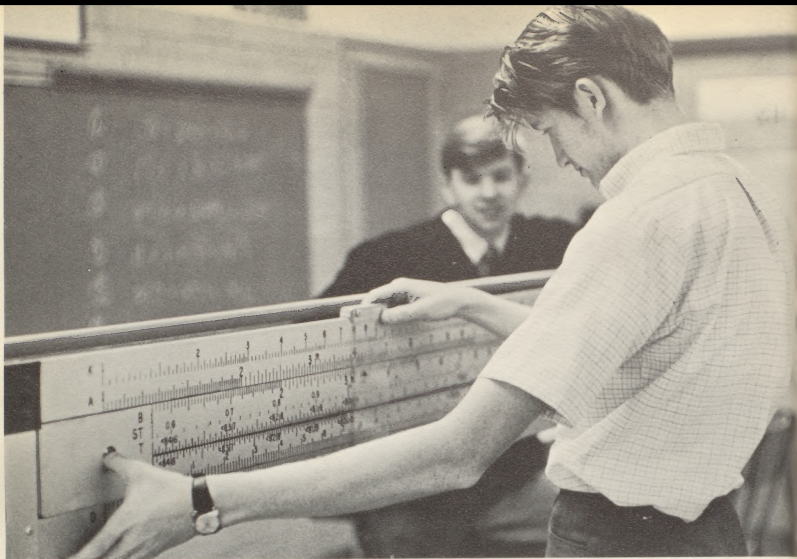

Pat Sobkowicz and Sherry Shook are locating Mongol tribes in Mr. Osburn's World History I class.

National events were of interest

More Tech students are learning about our present day world than they were before. Classes which help them are geography, which teaches the study of the land, climate, and the people; World History I and II, a study of our world, its people, past and present; United States History I and II, that is the study of our American heritage; government, in which students study how their country functions; and economics, which includes units on consuming, producing, and the system of exchange and distribution.

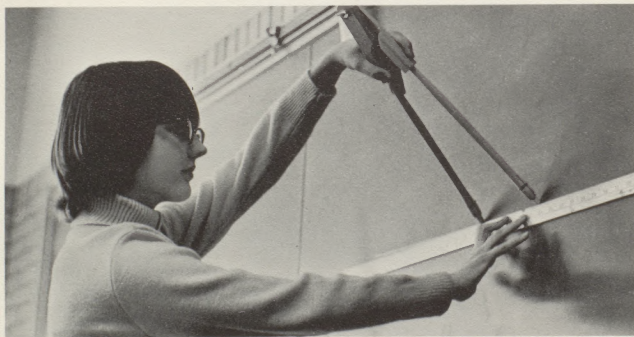

Linda McGinty and Christine Wojciehowski are locating a country in United States History I as Mr. Vieau looks on.

Connie Basham is drawing a straight angle in one of Mr. Jukes' geometry classes.

Mrs. Jones help students in Math 1 to measure correctly.

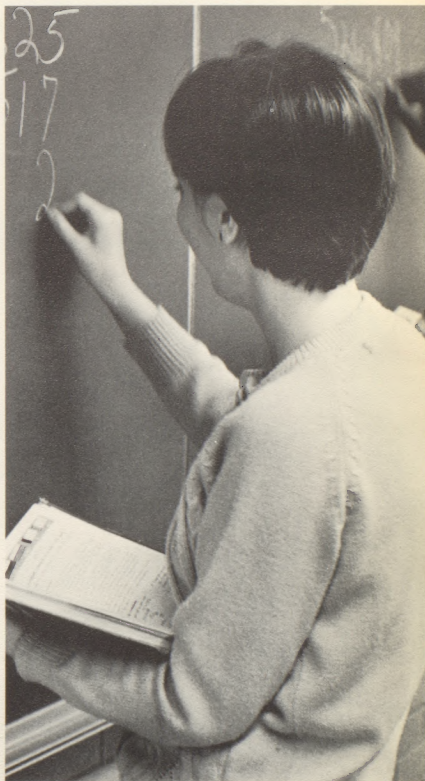

Math classes meet many needs

Tech's mathematics department has three main branches—general math, algebra and geometry.

General math aided students in logical thinking used in daily lives and experiences.

Algebra and geometry helped to prepare those who plan to attend college in the math or science fields.

Shop math was provided for boys who wanted to specialize in their chosen shops or vocations.

A student in a general math class works a problem on the board.

A student in developmental English learns speech skills.

Developmental classes where students are placed to reach individual levels

For some years now Tech has offered a full program of classes for those students who find the regular or average classes too difficult.

As the program is now operating, it is possible for average students in regular classes to take a special class in one or more areas where difficulty in meeting the standard has been found.

Chuck Blankenship counts out money to Miss Tibbles in developmental math.

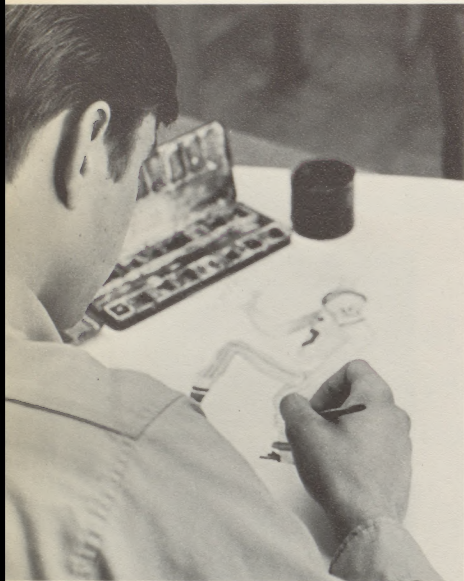

A student in Mr. Scofield's social studies class studies about the countries abroad.

The primary purpose of these special classes are to give the student a usable knowledge of the material involved and to prepare him for meeting the requirements of regular classes in that area. Thus much work in the developmental math classes would involve everyday needs such as simple addition and subtraction and the counting of money, while developmental English stresses the ability to read and comprehend, to spell words correctly, and to write such useful things as friendly and business letters.

Other classes offered on this program are United States History, social studies, and science.

Fine arts, a chance for students to express their talent

John Pavich demonstrates his ability to draw in Miss Clency's art class.

Fine arts have always been a release from the ordinary for high school students. Here at Tech the students have a wide variety to choose from. Vocal music or instrumental music was scheduled nearly every hour, each giving the opportunity of participating in an evening auditorium presentation.

The art department, offering either a shop or regular class program, is fascinating to many students whether talented in art or only appreciative of it.

Drama classes and after school activities give the student a chance to observe or participate in the stage world of pretend. Costuming, speaking, expressing, and scenery are involved. This year the Tech Drama Department presented "Rapunzel" for its first children's play.

Although often deleted from the fine arts field, dance is still considered an essential part. Though no formal dancing classes were offered, physical education classes studied and practiced some steps thought to be a definite part of the American tradition.

Instrumental class gives the student an introduction to music.

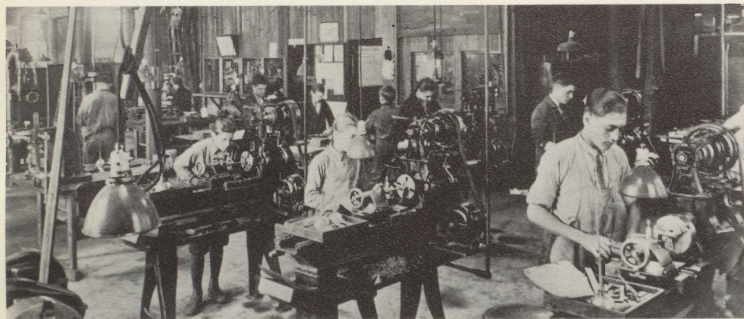

All students possess a degree of musical potential. The main purpose of instrumental instruction is to assist the student in acquiring skills and knowledge which will lead to greater understanding in music. All the band and orchestra instruments are taught. Students practice individually and progress at their own speed on assigned lessons. If a student is having trouble he is free to come to the instructor for help. Part of the period is used for group playing of the lessons he has been assigned. A beginning band rehearsal is held once a week before school for all students in the instrumental classes so that they gain experience in playing in a large group. Students are advanced into the band after they acquire enough skill on their instrument.

Shops

John Spoer skillfully turns project on lathe in Exploratory Wood.

Exploratory shops decide field of interest

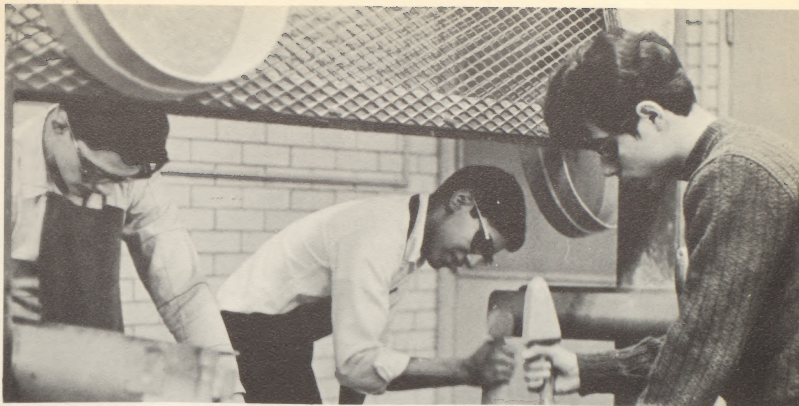

Freshman boys are required to take $\frac{1}{2}$ semester of each exploratory shop to help determine their vocation. Students rotate through four different shops; Exploratory Graphics, Exploratory Electric, Exploratory Metals and Exploratory Wood, to find one which interests them.

Exploratory Graphics include printing, sketching, and mechanical drawing, frequent use is made of transparencies, films and slides to illustrate text materials. Students develop salable skills in the operation of drafting equipment and enable the student to advance as a draftsman.

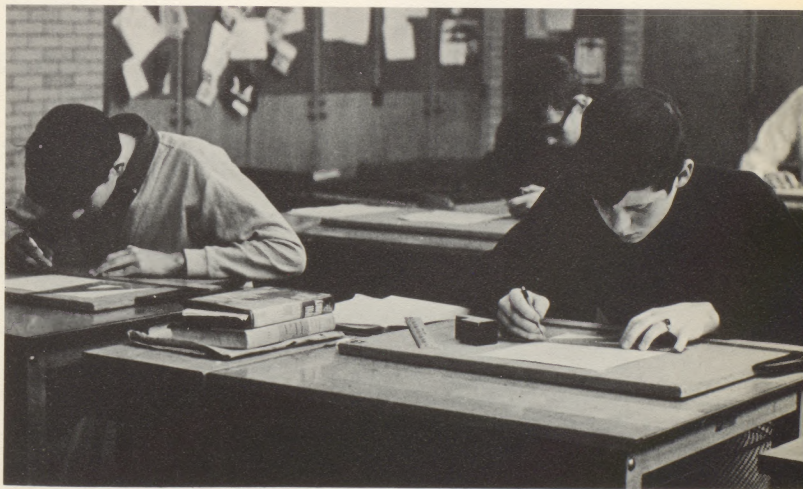

Exploratory electric offers the basic fundamentals of electricity. Students learn to make splices, wire simple circuits, and calculate current, voltage, and resistance.

In exploratory metals, students work in several fields of metal work, including welding, sheet metal, foundry and forge. Some learn to use metal cutting and shaping machines. Projects are made using metal to cut, shape, bend, pour, and weld.

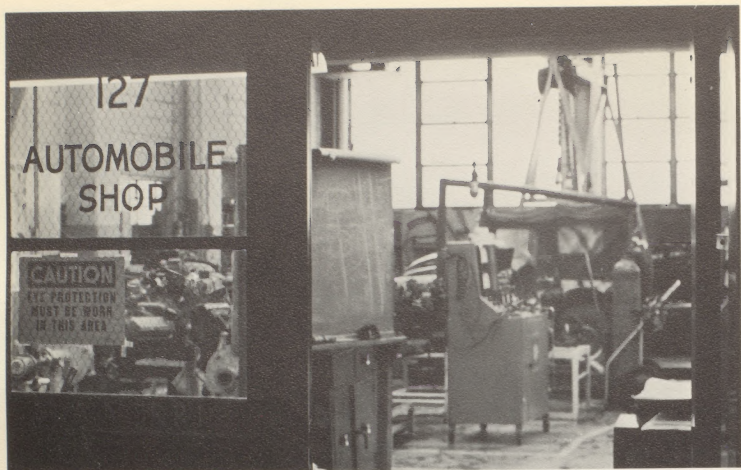

Exploratory wood teaches the use of woodworking tools, sanding, cutting and driving nails. The students build projects according to their ability and needs.

John Cardenas, Dave Chance and Robert Caudillo shape molds in foundry of exploratory metals.

Scott Anderson and Tom Blair work in Exploratory Graphics to complete drawings.

auto shop

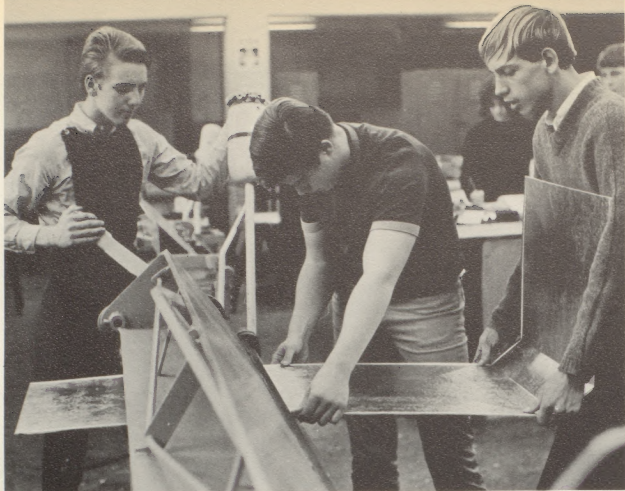

Auto Shop is not a required subject for boys. Most of those who do take this class start in their junior year. Auto Shop is divided into two principle areas: Auto I and Auto II.

Auto I is the study of the basic parts of an engine as well as how to repair them. To learn this the students are required to take apart and reassemble two cycle engine, as well as similar work on transmissions and brakes.

In Auto II material studied in Auto I is put to use. Repair and maintenance of cars is stressed. Students are allowed to bring in outside autos for repairs as part of their experience. After these boys have completed the course they are capable of doing anything from changing a flat tire to rebuilding an entire engine.

David Gaugert relines a brake drum.

Doug Schum, Phil Janik, Russell Plys demonstrate teamwork in sheet metal shop.

Doug, Phil, and Russell demonstrate the next step.

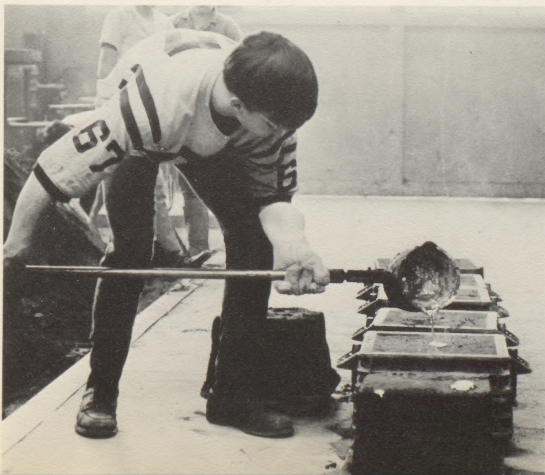

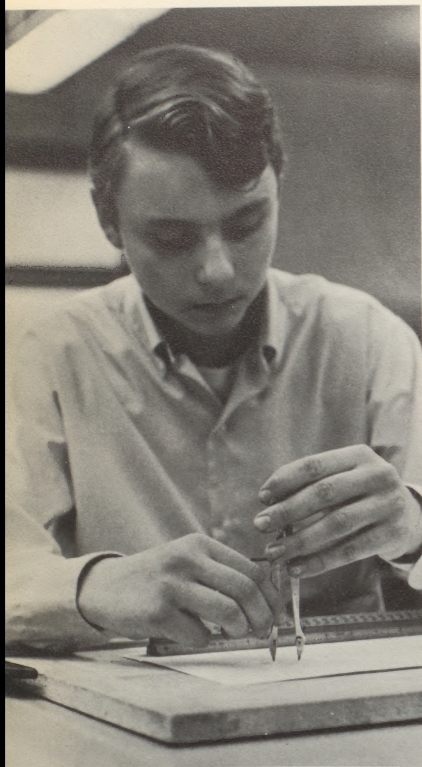

A student stays busy in foundry shop.

Students are offered sheet metal shop during their junior and senior years. In this shop boys learn different kinds of sheet metal work. They are also trained in the use of tools such as squaring shears, box and band break, lock former, corner slip and slip roll. After completion on the course, their necessary training in sheet metal shop, boys may be placed on a job outside the school; Mr. Turner, the instructor, helps in the recommended placements.

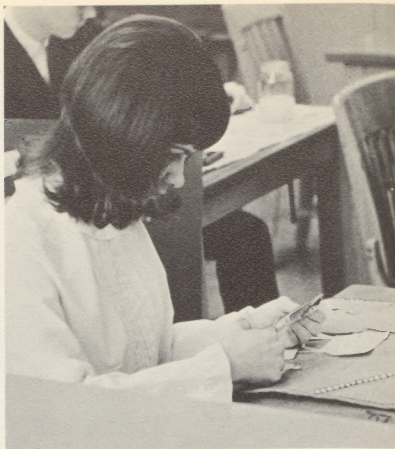

industry

Martin Holcomb pours lead into a mold in foundry shop.

Chuck Wilson learns a new technique in mechanical drawing.

Marie Brehmer cuts out an item for an art project.

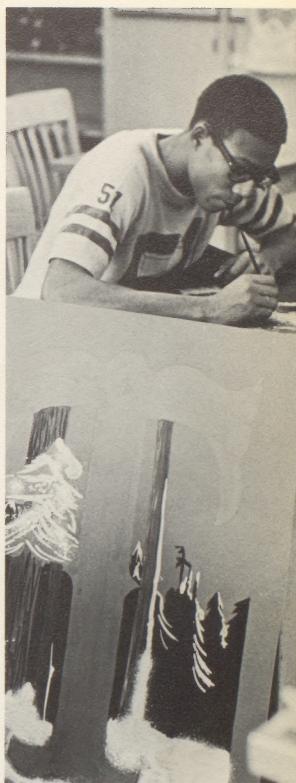

Although drafting is not a required shop, many boys take it. Drafting is a three hour shop. The boys are allowed to work at their own speed. Of course, there are different projects that are to be finished during a semester. The boys first learn the types of equipment that are used in drafting. There are certain specifications they have to learn. The boys can take drawings from books to get ideas of their own or rework the beginning pattern.

In drafting shop there is a blueprint machine which the boys are allowed to use. This makes reprints of the patterns of work the boys made. Some of the copies are given to other shops to make certain tools or other equipment needed by that shop.

Art shop is one of the favorites here at Tech. Taught by Miss Clency, the art department has offered art as a shop for talented students who think they might possibly make a career in some phase of art.

Dennis Chansler uses an angle in drafting shop.

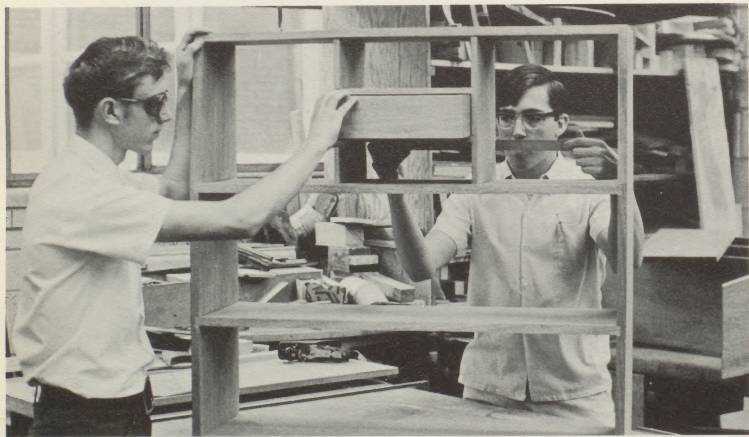

Alton Merkerson paints in art shop.

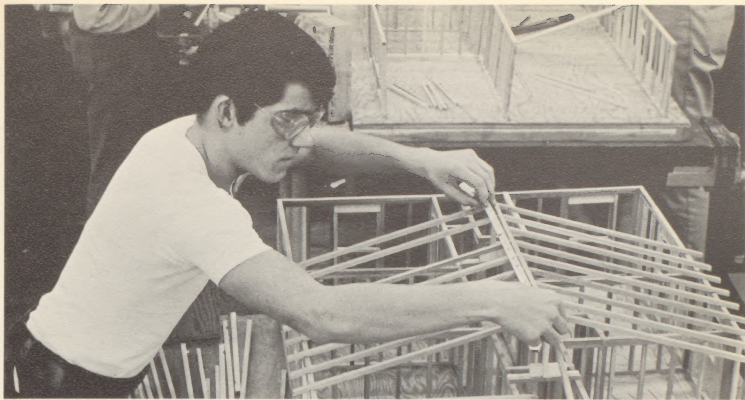

Shops demand drawing ability

Scott McWilliams and Steve Miller show a final project to Mr. Jaris.

The art of cabinet making is shown by two Tech boys.

Don Fielder measures a model of a home.

Shops use tools

Pattern shop is a 6-semester shop which is not a required subject. During the first two semesters the boys learn the basic fundamentals of a ruler and become familiar with hand and power tools. As the boys advance they learn how to run a jigsaw and learn more skills in the use of power machines. After one year the boys are able to make patterns for cabinets and then make the cabinets at their own speed. They also learn about joinery, wood, classification, and estimation.

Boys in Carpentry Shop learn to construct model homes and garages according to blueprint specifications with the aid of hand tools and portable electric machinery. In wood-working, design, selection and layout of lumber is heavily stressed.

Patternmaking is especially desirable to understand how patterns are made and how the molding is done.

Jim McCauley is stripping material on a bench saw.

Jeff Kadar and Tom Muha are using the C & P hand press.

Mr. Lazarz aids a student in machine shop.

Gary Walker works in machine shop.

Printing shop aids school

A print shop student cleans the letter press.

Experience has shown that most of the procedures of an occupation can be learned through supervised work. Boys who are interested in printing find this experience in Mr. Delaney's print shop. They study the fundamentals of off-set papers, film and plates, as well as operation of the Platen and Lithopress.

Students also helped do work for Tech by printing the TECH TIMES, posters, pamphlets, along with jobs from other schools.

Machine shop opens the door to various types of occupations for boys from a mechanical engineer to a fixture man.

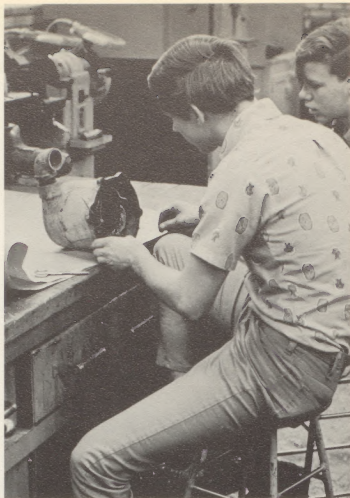

Evaluation of work is a regular part of this course. Students have the opportunity to work on specific and fundamental operations of the grinders, milling machine, drillpress, lathe, and power saw.

This shop provides the student with a good chance of success in the area of machine work.

Shops train for future

Welding shop is taken by many boys but it is not a required subject. Welding shop is a three-hour shop. The boys can take a maximum of four semesters. This shop is divided into parts so the boys can learn various skills. For instance, the first semester deals mostly with practice penetration, running beads, and taking many tests. During the second semester the boys use the skills they have learned. From this time on they work much at their own speed. The machines they learn to run are called: arc machines, oxygen acetelene, tig, mig, burner, and of course, the uses of the cutting tools. Welding shop does many repairs for the school. On some days the boys have discussions on what they have learned.

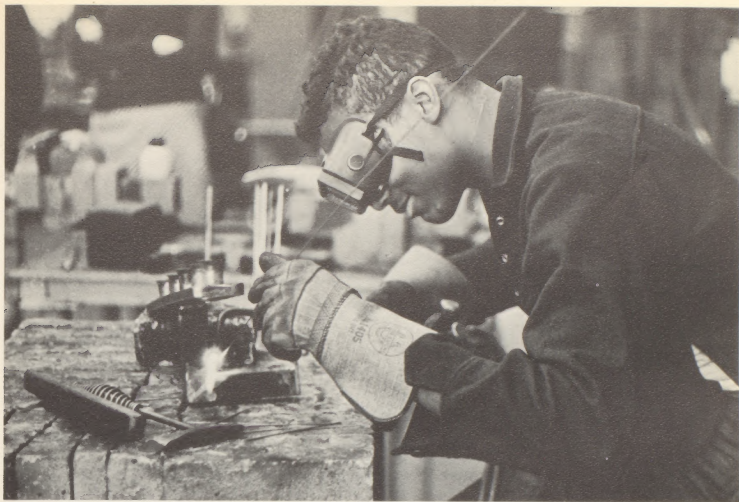

Students in pipefitting shop learn the use of hand and power tools, different types of joints, hot water circulation and ventilation. The training in these areas helps boys find future employment in various apprenticeships, heating installations and service, along with many other allied fields.

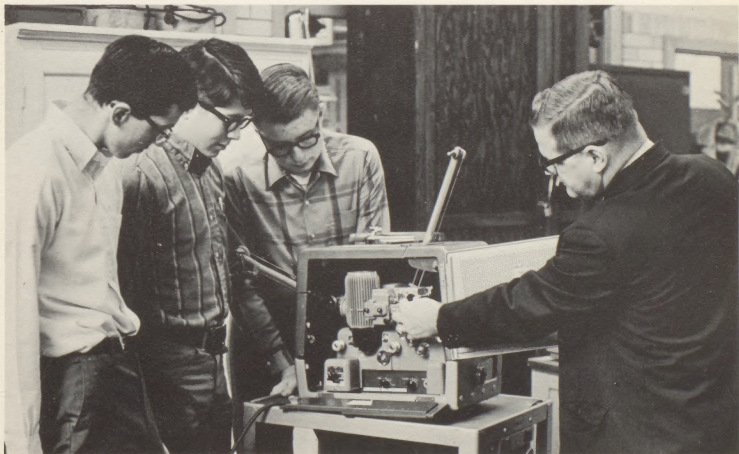

Students work in industrial electric shop.

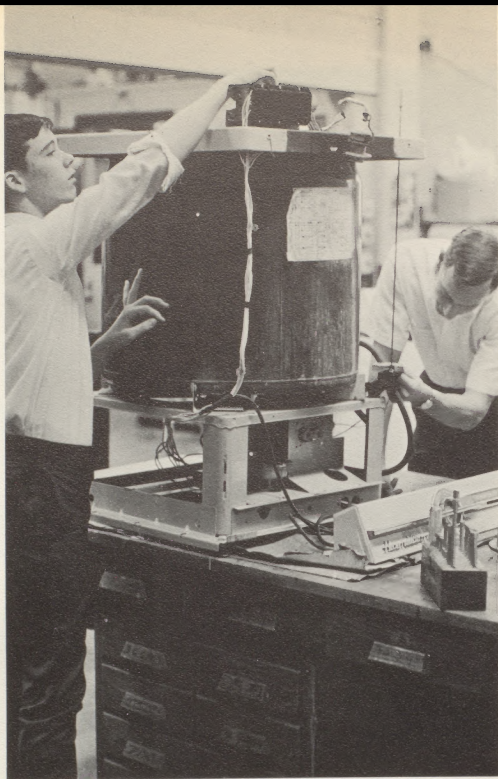

Tom Markovich and Terry Matlock work in pipefitting shop.

Arnold Reid demonstrates a welding technique.

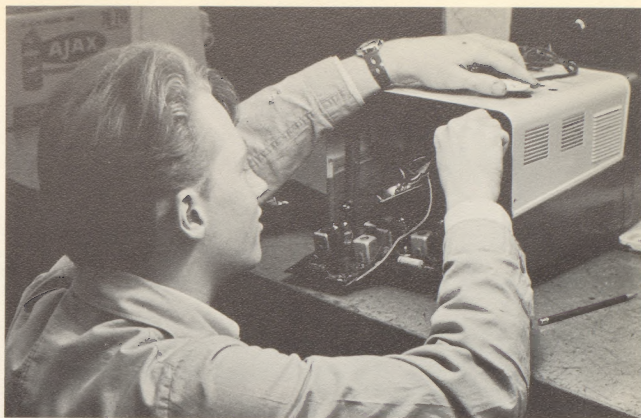

Robert McClure, John Houlihan, and Ray Para watch as Mr. Wagner teaches use of a movie projector.

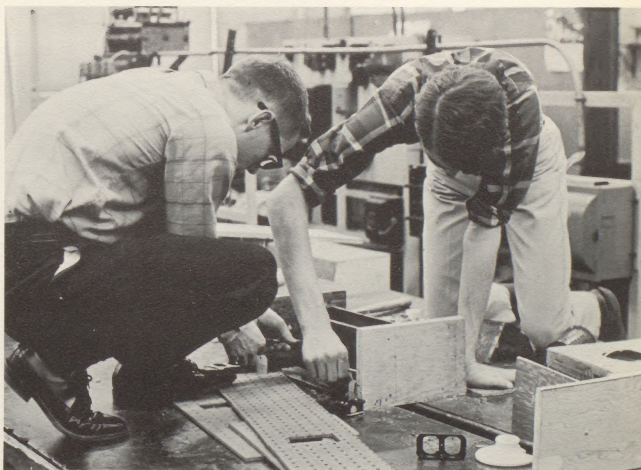

Randy Cochran and Rick Mis use basic fundamentals in home appliance shop.

Home appliance useful

Boys take home appliance shop for two to three hours each day. They learn basic skills and tools used in repairing appliances used in the home.

Chuck Hendricks works on repairing a television set.

Chuck Sawyer and Bernie Malacina work in electrics on various projects.

Future typists, clerks are trained at Tech

Nancy Sobczak types from her dictation in Steno Lab.

Tech students took classes in which they acquired skills needed by stenographers, office clerks, and IBM operators. These classes laid the foundation for specialized studies in business and provided the basic training for each. With these preparatory courses, girls learned the functions and activities of today's business world.

Girls in typing 4 take 5-minute timings to increase their speed.

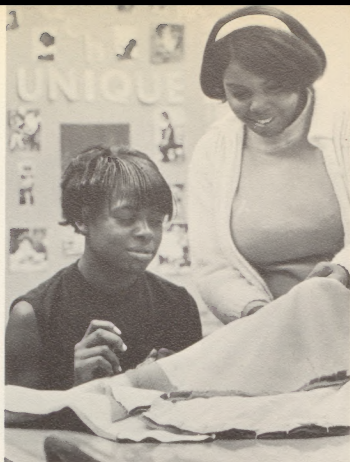

In typing 1, Lockie Cole learns the basic principles of typing special letter forms.

Pat Hall works on an IBM keypunch.

Koffey Hunter and Jean O'Neil work on a garment in Clothing II.

Girls eagerly respond to questions in Mrs. Higgins' Family Living class.

Cindy Basham prepares a pie crust in Foods II class.

Clothing is offered to all girls at Tech, with most girls taking it during their Freshman year. In the advanced clothing course girls are able to experience using various materials and patterns. The girls who take clothing are able to make their own clothes, giving them pride in their finished garments.

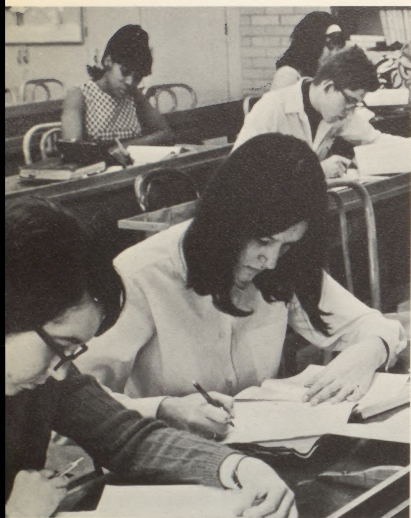

In foods, girls learn about the uses of various ingredients and cooking equipment. Each girl learns the proper way to set a table, and the art of serving the food and clearing the table is considered just as important as the cooking of food.

To give girls a better understanding of home life and home care, they are required to study family living and homemaking, and are offered home nursing and home management.

Karen Dittoe and Laura Eubanks review the correct way to record business transactions in Bookkeeping.

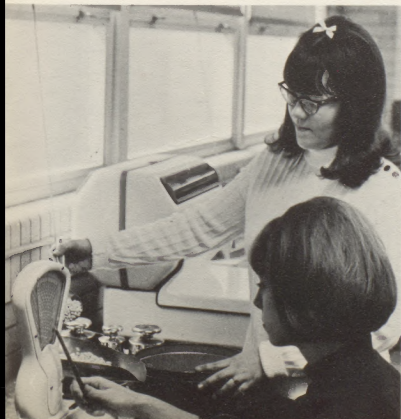

Business students receive classroom training

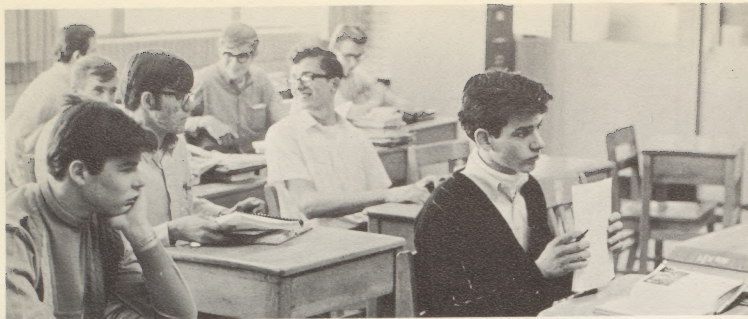

Business students during the year learned responsibilities of office workers by taking some of their duties. Filing students kept neat, up-to-date files. Students in Business Machines learned to add, subtract, multiply, and divide. Bookkeeping taught the complete cycle of a business transaction and recording it. Practical Service and Introduction to Business provided basic training for the specialized business studies.

C.O.E., D.E., retailing work on the job

C.O.E. is offered to senior business students who have completed the necessary work to obtain a job placement. They must have a desire and interest for office work.

C.O.E. is based on a training plan outlining the office activities and conditions that take place being of value to the student.

The program gives the student-learner a headstart in gaining actual office experience and job preparation before graduation. It enables them to establish a good reference for future employment.

D.E. is a high school program which prepares a person for a career in the field of merchandising and marketing of goods and services.

D.E. is a cooperative program of education between the school and business community. The student receives credit for his classroom activities as well as for his work experience.

Retailing is offered to junior girls and boys who are enrolled in the D.E. program. In this class they receive preparatory job training in the areas of marketing and distribution so they may perform adequately on the job in their senior year.

Material studied in retailing includes such things as how to handle typical shoppers to points on arranging an eye-catching window display.

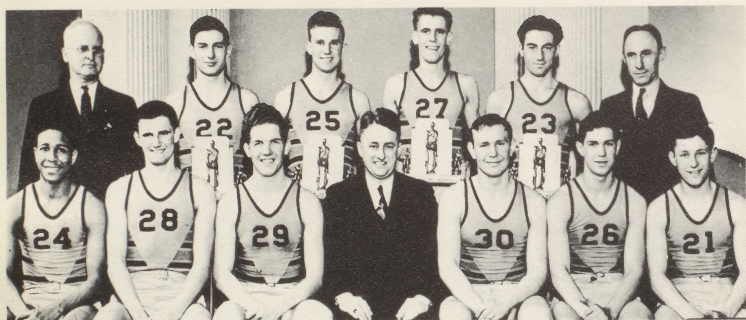

Mary Bol and Bunnie Allman learn retailing.

Students discuss in D.E. class.

But Tiger spirit came through as the excitement of Homecoming built until it was all over with Tech on top 24 to 6.

The Tigers got a big lift when early in the season they defeated Morgan Park, who was fourth ranked in the Chicago Public School League.

Motto

"Not Finished—Just Begun"

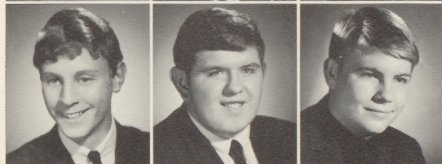

Excitement has been the key note in the history of the Class of 1969. Among the events that the seniors participated in was a party given by the juniors. The Senior Mirror Awards were presented at the Senior Party. "Senior Days" were happy days; they consisted of Sweatshirt and Bermuda Day, Come-As-You-Were Day, and Dress-up Day. The Senior Dinner on April 11, and the Prom on May 9 followed in the tradition of 49 previous senior classes.

Acknowledgement

The hard work that goes into a yearbook is many times overshadowed by lighter moments filled with relief when the last deadline is met.

The '69 CHART represents the results of the cooperation and efforts of its staff. They wrote the story of Tech in its Fiftieth Anniversary Year. In a personal sense, I am deeply indebted to its contributors. To mention all of them would be impossible; however, special thanks should go to Danny Evanoff for his hard work on the Historical Section, also to Sharon Scott for her help with every part of the book, and especially to Connie Basham, our advertising manager.

Most of all I'd like to thank Mrs. Myers, whose determination helped us face the problems we were confronted with throughout the year.

The photography was produced through the work and cooperation of Mae of Bodie Studios.

Mr. Al Schlegelmileh of Paragon was a great help in suggesting improvements and catching our mistakes.

Despite mild mania and temporary insanity, we made it!

Thanks to the faculty and those whom we caused any inconveniences. I will never forget the memories from an unbeatable and unbelievable '69 CHART staff.
